Hongkong, November 5th, 1877. To-DAY, we publish some remarks recently made by the Fresident of the Social Science Congress (the Earl of ABERDEEN) on the subject of prison labour and discipline, which are of interest here at the present time in view of the discussion called forth by His Excellency the Governor's policy on the repression of crime. The views of. the noble Earl on this subject are practically the same as those enunciated by Mr. HENNESSY in the Council Chamber a few weeks ago. The question remains, can those views be advantageously carried into effect in Hongkong? The Earl of Assence peaks strongly on the evil of short sentences,: an evil which it is impossible to ignore, and recommends that a certain number of successive convictions should render the delinquent liable to be arraigned before a higher triof imprisonment or even to be sent to penal servitude. This is undoubtedly sound logic Rear-Admiral Lafont. at home, but here another element enters into the question, our deportation laws, under which old offenders can be banished for a term of years on a recommendation by the magistrate. The question then resolves for the coming year contains, in addition to the itself into deportation versus long sentences. The end to be aimed at in the indiction o -punishment is to make it deterrent; is it can also be made reformatory, so much the of a Government under ordinary circumstances to attempt the reformation of criminals, not only for the sake of the triminals themselves but also for that of society generally. There is no such obligation resting upon the Government of a Colony so peculiarly circumstanced as Hongkong. The vital consideration is to deter from crime. and it must not be forgotten that the great bulk of our criminals are aliens, that no six inches beam. She has a pair of eight inches obligation rests upon us as regards them, and that all we are bound to do is to protect | tion to the owner. tation laws ought to be enforced in all their to do so, with the idea of reclaiming the criminals, would be a departure from its proper belong to philanthropic societies and individuals. If it is necessary to incarcerate criminals for long terms, then the advisability living after their liberation, is obvious. Very belong, we believe, to the skilled artizan -class; many of them are coolies out of if they were taught some useful and congenial craft no doubt a large proportion of the same time with the Hindoos. them would be preserved from falling into their old courses. Nevertheless, their imprisonment ought to be made as punitive as is consistent with humanity. This, however, as we have said before, is a side-issue. The question remains long "imprisonment or deportation. Very likely it is already decided which form of punishment is to be pursued during the administration of Mr HENNESSY: the nature of the calendar for the last Criminal Sessions seems to indicate as much, but it would be well if His Excel-

But it will be admitted that when imprisonment is simply punitive, it fails of its most important function, if it be not at the same time deterrent, and that punishment for brief terms does entirely fail in this respect is amply estafigures afforded by the annual volumes of judicial statistics. There is no abstract moral connexion between effences against human laws and the particular punishments which particular laws have prescribed, and, therefore, when punishment proves notoriously inadequate either to re-form the criminal or to deter from crime, it becomes simply useless, if not werse than useless,

That the same individual should be sent to prison for a week or a month for the tenth, twentieth, liftieth, or, as sometimes occurs in London, even for the hundredth time, can only serve to bring prisons and the administration of the criminal law into contempt.
